6 A NEW TOOLKIT FOR DEVELOPING SCENARIOS FOR CLIMATE CHANGE RESEARCH AND POLICY ANALYSIS
by Kristie L. Ebi, Tom Kram, Detlef P. van Vuuren, Brian C. O'Neill, and Einar Kriegler
As scientists and policymakers look at the future of our planet in a warming climate, new scenarios that take into account various demographic, social, economic, technological, and environmental factors help paint a picture of what we might face down the road as we try to balance adaptation and mitigation.

17 BRISTOL BAY WILD SALMON, PEBBLE MINE, AND INTRACTABLE CONFLICT: LESSONS FOR ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES AND SCIENCES
by Samuel Snyder
This first article in a two-part series tells the background of the "most important environmental decision you've never heard of"—that of the proposal to build what might be North America's largest open pit copper and gold mine, in the middle of the world's largest sockeye salmon ecosystem in Bristol Bay, Alaska.

COMMENTARY

27 MODELS OF CHINESE ENGAGEMENT IN AFRICA'S EX extrACTIVE SECTORS AND THEIR IMPLICATIONS
by Tang Xiaoyang
As growth continues across China, the country's business interests in Africa serve as a catalyst for change in the region. China's activities in Africa are still small scale but if interested parties can organize their efforts, Chinese investments could pave the road for sustainable and extensive development in Africa.

31 PILES OF JUNK: CAN THE MODERN SCRAP BUSINESS BE SUSTAINABLE?
by Alan H. McGowan
Adam Minter's new book, Junkyard Planet, tells us the largely unknown story of the modern scrap business and its incredible success since the 1960s. But that success comes at a price and the environmental implications for the long-term sustainability of the business should not be ignored.

Editorial

As we write this editorial we have just received the sad news of the death of Professor Vic Barnett, who has had a major role in the existence of Teaching Statistics, and we send our condolences to his family. A fuller obituary will appear in a later issue of Teaching Statistics.

In this issue we feature an article by Laura Taylor and Kirsten Doehler; this looks at the ways some of the now very well established online polling technology can be used in teaching, both in terms of data analysis and illustrating sampling concepts. We then have a collection of articles and letters regarding the Birthday "Paradox". Anyone tempted to assume that this problem had been exhausted will find this material illuminating. Whilst the problem is set out and alternative conceptualisations are presented, the correspondence clearly illustrates just how tricky conditional probability remains even in the best studied problems. Fernando de Maio looks at using regression in major questions of inequality and social structure which help sociology students understand and appreciate the importance of quantitative modelling and analysis. We then have an article on another well studied probability "paradox", the Monty Hall problem. This one however considers the problem in a prose form, and proposes an isomorphism which suggests that the problem may be more than a mere curiosity. It would be interesting to receive submissions regarding other such isomorphisms. Finally, there is as usual the excellent Statistical Diversions column.

ON THE COVER

UNION, MAYBE
Organized labor is changing, but that doesn't mean labor unions are going away.

COVER ILLUSTRATION BY TRAVIS ROTH

FEATURES

22 LABOR DAZE
Even with recent declines in union membership and high-profile “no” votes on organizing, it is unlikely that organized labor will disappear anytime soon.

32 SIMULATING SILICON VALLEY
Why HR recruiters might want to analyze Silicon Valley’s playbook when hiring talent.

36 SINGING THE PRAISES OF PRAISES
If managers want to create a workplace environment where people thrive, tap into the benefits of praise. It costs nothing and pays big dividends to both giver and receiver.

40 MORE DOING
From interning at Home Depot to CHRO at tech firm Workday, Ashley Goldsmith’s path isn’t for the faint of heart.

SPECIAL REPORT

44 HEALTH INSURERS: THE SHIFT FROM SPECIALIZATION
As the consumer changes from employer to employee, there’s a renewed interest in one vendor that does everything.
