SPECIAL REPORT

39 The Power of Asking Pivotal Questions
In a rapidly changing business landscape, executives need the ability to quickly spot both new opportunities and hidden risks. Asking the right questions can help you broaden your perspective — and make smarter decisions.
BY PAUL J.H. SCHOEMAKER AND STEVEN KRUPP

49 Using Simulated Experience to Make Sense of Big Data
As data analyses get more complex, how can companies best communicate results to ensure that decision makers have a proper grasp of the data’s implications?
BY ROBIN M. HOGARTH AND EMRE SOYER

55 Why You Decide the Way You Do
For executives, making good decisions is essential. New research offers insights into factors that can affect the decision-making process.
BY BRUCE POSNER

"Researchers have long sought to shed light on the inner workings of the human brain and the way people make decisions. In recent years, curiosity about the decision-making process has attracted academics from fields as diverse as neuroscience, management, behavioral economics and psychology."
— BRUCE POSNER
Building resilience ... is an ongoing process that enables companies to embrace change in a turbulent and complex business environment by expanding their portfolio of capabilities.”
— JOSEPH FIKSÉL ET AL.

INNOVATION STRATEGY

23 Mastering the ‘Name Your Product Category’ Game
If you’re launching an innovative product in a nascent industry, it’s important to understand — and take advantage of — the dynamics through which new product category labels emerge.
BY FERNANDO F. SUAREZ AND STINE GRODAL

MARKETING

31 The Case for ‘Benevolent’ Mobile Apps
Some companies’ smartphone apps focus on pushing product sales. However, apps that build trust by providing consumers with valuable information can improve users’ image of your brand — and increase their willingness to purchase your products.
BY GLEN L. URBAN AND FAREENA SULTAN

INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY

61 The Dark Side of Information Technology
In recent years, digital technologies have been transforming workplaces and increasing economic productivity. But could overuse of information technology now be sapping your employees’ — and your organization’s — well-being?
BY MONIDEEP TAFREDAR, JOHN D’ARCY, OFIR TUREL AND ASHISH GUPTA

STRATEGY

71 Adapting to the Sharing Economy
Instead of buying and owning products, consumers are increasingly interested in leasing and sharing them. Companies can benefit from the trend toward “collaborative consumption” through creative new approaches to defining and distributing their offerings.
BY KURT MATZLER, VIKTORIA VEIDER AND WOLFGANG KATHAN

RISK MANAGEMENT

79 From Risk to Resilience: Learning to Deal With Disruption
To prosper in the face of turbulent change, organizations need to improve how they deal with unexpected disruptions to complex supply chains. Companies can cultivate such resilience by understanding their vulnerabilities — and developing specific capabilities to compensate for those vulnerabilities.
BY JOSEPH FIKSÉL, MIKAELA POLYVIOU, KEELY L. CROXTON AND TIMOTHY J. PETTIT

OPINION

96 Embrace Your Ignorance
Today’s savviest executives acknowledge that most of the time, they can’t accurately predict what their customers will want, like or need. That’s where experiments come in.
BY MICHAEL SCHRAOE
QUICK TAKES  Notes on designing effective social media campaigns, the hidden downsides of IT, making supply chains more resilient, how apps can build stronger bonds with customers, the advantages of getting involved in regulatory policy — plus other observations and ideas from this issue.

CUSTOMIZING SOCIAL MEDIA MARKETING  Are your company's products primarily useful — or fun? Recent research suggests that the answer to that question should guide your approach to social media marketing campaigns.
— Christian Schulze, Lisa Schöler and Bernd Skiera

WHY IT PAYS TO BECOME A RULE MAKER  In the past, companies did the best they could to comply with environmental regulations. But some leading companies are finding that a more effective approach is to help develop better rules.
— Andrew King

HOW EFFECTIVE IS LOCATION-TARGETED MOBILE ADVERTISING?  Mobile advertising that is targeted based on a consumer's location can be effective — particularly with customers who have a high level of interest in the type of product you're selling.
— Zheng Fang, Xueming Luo and Megan E. Keith

THE PERILS OF ATTENTION FROM HEADQUARTERS  Operations in growing markets such as China often draw substantial attention from corporate headquarters. Unfortunately, that attention does not always add value — and can even impede performance.
— Cyril Bouquet, Jean-Louis Barsoux and Orly Levy

WHY SLEEP IS A STRATEGIC RESOURCE  Research shows that sleep deprivation has a number of consequences that can affect work performance negatively. So why do so many modern workplaces condone practices that are not conducive to healthy sleep schedules?
— Christopher M. Barnes and Gretchen Spreitzer

From the Editor  Reflections on humility in business.
